City of Charleston Debuts New Website Featuring Improved Navigation, Mobile-friendly Access

Charleston, S.C.-- As part of its ongoing transparency initiative, Monday morning the City of Charleston launched a newly designed and significantly more accessible website. The site can be viewed at www.charleston-sc.gov, and with a mobile-friendly design, it is now more useful for citizens using tablets, smartphones and other electronic devices.

Mayor John Tecklenburg said, “With the launch of the redesigned, mobile-friendly website this morning, we are continuing our commitment to communicate more effectively with our citizens. The new website, new Citizen Services Desk, new city app and more new technologies on the way also provide citizens more efficient and responsive access to city services and representatives.”

City Chief Information Officer Wes Ratterree said, “With any redesign and reorganization of this scope, there are always ongoing edits and improvements, so we encourage citizens to reach out to the Citizen Services Desk at 843-724-7311 or citizenservices@charleston-sc.gov with any comments or concerns.”
